Functional foods

'A food is considered functional if it has a proven beneficial health effect on one or more body functions beyond basic nutrition'.

Poland is among the countries with the largest elderly populations, which translates into growing incidence of diseases that are common in older adults (metabolic syndrome, cardiovascular diseases, chronic inflammation, cancer, etc.). This leads to a reduced life expectancy in Poland. The advancement and increased daily intake of functional foods may contribute to reducing the development of these diseases and improving the overall health of Poles.

Our success lies in making cookies that qualify as functional food. These are Lady Fingers Sponge Cakes with high fibre content and Sponge Cake Biscuits multigrain with high fibre content.
